COVID-19 & International Trade – Nation-State Responses to a Global Pandemic

The COVID-19 pandemic has already had a catastrophic impact on international markets, with far reaching impacts on international trade that will be felt for years to come. In the short term, government authorities responsible for the regulation of global trade have been hobbled by the rapidly spreading pandemic and its resulting restrictions on their ability to work. Nevertheless, several early initiatives may serve as a harbinger of things to come, as regulators around the globe act to mitigate the impact of the pandemic on global supply chains and national security. This client alert provides information on the first visible impacts on and changes to export controls, tariffs, foreign direct investment regulations, and sanctions and respective enforcement.

The Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency of the Department of Homeland Security Updates Essential Critical Infrastructure Workforce Guidance

On Saturday, March 28, 2020, the Department of Homeland Security's Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency ("CISA") revised its list of "Essential Critical Infrastructure Workers," which provides expressly non-binding guidance to state and local authorities on identifying their essential workforce during the COVID-19 pandemic. As explained by CISA Director, Christopher C. Krebs, in his memorandum accompanying the agency's initial March 19 guidance, the list of essential workers was intended to "inform critical infrastructure community decision-making to determine the sectors, sub-sectors, segments, or critical functions that should continue normal operations[.]" CISA's revised guidance further emphasizes its advisory nature, modifying references to the document as "guidance" in the initial March 19 list to "advisory guidance" in the new version throughout. It is therefore critical that businesses do not rely solely on the guidance in making any determinations about continuing operations, and that they first consult any orders and guidance issued by the states and localities in which they operate.
