Los Angeles

Irvin De La O is a litigation associate in the Los Angeles office of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher. In addition to working on complex litigation matters, he also maintains an active pro bono practice.

Irvin earned his law degree from Georgetown University Law Center. While at Georgetown, he was a member of the Latin American Law Students Association, served as a research assistant at the O'Neill Institute for National and Global Health Law, and participated in the Center for Applied Legal Studies Clinic, where he successfully represented his client in immigration court resulting in their approval of asylum. Irvin also received an award for best brief in his Legal Research and Writing class.

He graduated from the University of California, Los Angeles, with a Bachelor of Arts in Political Science with honors.

Prior to law school, Irvin worked as an aide to then Congressman Xavier Becerra and Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti. In those capacities, he worked on a number of issues related to international affairs, immigration, the environment, education, and military service academy nominations.

Irvin is admitted to practice law in the State of California and before the United States District Court for the Central District of California.
